THE INTERVIEW. Reporter. Governor, it is the desire of THE Reporter. Will you give some of your reasons for this opinion!

Governor S. Yes, sir. In the first place, it was very cumbrous and the responsibility was too much divided. Take Washington, for instance; there was a mayor and thirty-five aldermen and councilmen; in Georgetown about half this number, and in the bounty about half this number, and in the bounty there were nine members of the Levy Court, in all, more than sixty legislative and executive officers over a piece of territory six miles square, and containing a little more than one hundred thousand people. Having been a member of both the Board of Aldermon and Common Conneil of Washington, and also of the Levy Court, I can speak advisedly, when I say that there was say that there was

MORE TALK AND LESS ACTION under these respective governments than the world has ever seen. For example: I tried for two years, while a member of the councils, to get a lew squares of the street on which I lived payed with cobble stones in order to prevent being mired on my way to and from my place of business; and finally relinquished it in despair. The history of the last sive years of the old corporation showed an expenditure of many millions of dollars, while the result was the paying of three streets with binestone. Reporter. What do you think of the late District government as a whole!

Governor S. I regard it as a success. It accomplished more in three years than was ever accomplished by any municipal government in twenty years. It was a steady, persistent fight from beginning to end of the progressive peowent to the bat for their final finning, and completed it with only 31 runs, leaving the Americans winners by 87.

Base ball followed between the Boston and Philadelphia clubs, and was won by the latterscore 15 to 4. The weather was fine, and the attendance was numerous.

A base ball match between eighteen of the lish club and nine Americans is set down for disjointed, middy, dusty, fragmentary villegisted, middy, dusty, fragmentary villegisted. disjointed, middy, dusty, fragmentary vil-ages, possessing no attractions either for the resident to remain or the stranger to tarry within their gates.

Reporter. Complaint has been made, Governer, against making such vast improvements in such a short space of time; what was the Governor S. Simply this: If it had not been done in this way, and in this short time, the probability is it never would have been done. This may seem somewhat strange; but when you reflect that before the link had dried upon the parchment on which was written the law appropriating $4,000,000 for improvements in junction suits were begun, which were followed up continually by others. Had we faltered then the streets of the city would have been in a chaotic state, the Board of Public Works have been (and justly so) the laughing-stock of the whole people, and no real improvements.

have been (and justly so) the laughing-stock of the whole people, and no real improvements would have been consummated. This plan of improvement required the establishment of a thorough system of grades, as well as unformity in the style of improvement. Any one with half an eye can see the advantage of this by looking over the improvements made. And it is a significant fact that during the recent Congressional investigation not one single cent Congressional investigation to the board has been in the province of the children in the province of the continued and finished. There are the swamp lands of the Potomac nearest the cliv; they should be reclaimed at an early day, both on account of their unsightliness and for the health of our inhabitants. Also, a harbor should be made for the benefit of the citizens. Every facility should be given to the two great your mauner of letting contracts, and particularly that you let them without due consultalarly that you let them without due consulta-tion with the other members of the board; and next as to the unnecessarily large number of employees; what do you say to that? Governor S. In regard to the mode of letting the work, I would say that no act of the board has been more misrepresented than this. They but followed the practice of the United States Government and all other responsible Govern. Government and all other responsible Govern-another this afternoon at five o'clock, but in consequence of a high wind prevailing the professor found trouble in infating his balloon. He was to be accompanied in his accension by Richard Smith, a nephew of the proprietor of Smith's Taland. It was about ten minutes Richard Smith, a nephew of the proprietor of Smith's Ialand. It was about ten minutes after six when the two got into the basket and the balloon began to rise slowly, crossing the river to the city. Ballast was thrown out, but for some reason the balloon failed to ascend. It crossed several rows of buildings only a few fest above the roofs, and striking the flagstaff of the Fennsylvania railroad building collapsed, the basket containing the men falling over the side of the building into Fourth street, a distance of about ninety feet. Just before the basket struck the street Pedanto for remained in, received severe injuries and was removed to the hospital in an insensible condition.

If four of these persons were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and four elected by the citizens for the period, say, of from four to six years, subject to impeachment and removal for misconduct, with their powers thoroughly defined, you would get a government in which all interests would be represented and protected. I would abolish all outside organizations, such as the Beard of Health and Police Commissioners, and put the entire sman. ics Commissioners, and put the entire man-gement of the District of Columbia under gement of the District of Columbia under his government.
